Renewing Life*

Four Stories

about selfless volunteers who renewed the lives of desperately ill patients through altruistic kidney donation

Dr. Aviel Haskin, Renate Azani, Miri Levinsky and Esther Mamat are all medical professionals. When they decided to donate their kidneys, they understood very well what the process involved. They found that they not only gave but also received – a better understanding of their patients' point of view.

Edna Halop has been volunteering since she was a child. She has opened her home to the needy, built a school in Kenya, and managed countless projects. Recently she decided to up her game, and donated a kidney to a stranger.

Yoni Geller wanted to give thanks for surviving the Second Lebanese War. When he started the kidney donation process, he encountered countless obstacles, including a cancer scare, and very nearly gave up. In the end he realized that he appeared exactly at the right time and place to the kidney patient who was in need of his help.

Erez Asis says that kidney donation defies intellect and logic. When he heard from Matnat Chaim that he was a match for Linor, a young woman with special needs, he understood that his kidney was meant for her.
